Financial Assistance for Graduate Studies in School Counseling at The University of Tennessee

Most of our students pay for their graduate studies through combinations of traditional financial aid, part or full-time work, and savings. Our faculty members understand that graduate studies can be very difficult to afford. We work to keep costs low and assist our students with this difficulty in every way possible. Regrettably, there is little financial aid directly within our control.

We are occasionally able to provide special scholarships or assistantships. When this becomes possible, faculty advisors contact individual students to guide their application.

We frequently forward notices of open assistantships or other work opportunities on campus to our students. Faculty members support our students’ applications for these opportunities as requested.

The Graduate School has a limited number of fellowships. We normally recommend a small number of our most competitive new students for these fellowships.

The Graduate School maintains information regarding fellowships and other financial aid possibilities at their website. If you have applied to or are accepted to the MHCP and see that you are particularly well qualified for a fellowship, contact the Program Coordinator to explain how and why you may be competitive for the opportunity. The Coordinator and faculty members will assist you in pursuing the opportunity if they also see you as competitive.

You can find more information about financial aid at the university website:
http://onestop.utk.edu/your-money/